Interdependence & Interconnectedness

Why Measurement is Important

A fundamental reassessment of how we measure rural development progress and who defines success

Funding pipelines from all sources will have far greater impact

There has to be mutual respect, and I think oftentimes communities value what funders bring to the table because of the connection to the financial resources that will come along with them. But that same respect isn't always given or shown by funders who walk into a space acknowledging the [local] work. . . If you don't demand that, it doesn't happen.

President, Black Belt Community Foundation

3

Measure progress relative to the rural effort's starting point at its current stage of development - not against an ideal "success" standard.

More progress is made when communities are allowed to assess progress from their own starting points.

How you perceive is how you proceed. I believe this and I witness misperceptions about Native America all the time. These misperceptions limit our opportunities and we use a lot of resources to break down these misperceptions just to get to a starting point with funders.

5

Identify, value, and measure effective collaboration as progress toward rural prosperity.

Collaboration must be built on trust, shared understanding and goals, broad participation and decision-making across stakeholders

[In rural America] nobody has the resources to go it alone. One of the things it takes to do better – that almost no funding streams are willing to pay for – is collaboration. They’re willing to pay for that particular project, but the glue that holds it all together is just probably the most difficult piece to find support for in rural communities.

RES Associates, LLC*

Identify, value, and measure signals of local momentum as progress toward rural prosperity.

Youth engagement is a particularly good indicator of momentum - it increases young adults' belief that they can find a way to stay in the community.

Our native youth, of the ones I was able to survey on Cheyenne River, feel optimistic that they can do better than what their parents had access to. That is a direct reflection of how recently colonization happened to us. You can tell from your grandma going to [non-Native] boarding school that "I'm going to have a better access to education or better opportunity access than what my grandma did." I think that optimism from youth could be a good measurement of success in rural America.

Four Bands Community Fund*

Health Equity & Measurement

Using a community's own understanding of identity and measurement of health is critical for equitably addressing health conditions and supporting community prosperity.

1

Advance local, equitable, sustainable ownership and control of outdoor recreation assets.

Equitable development prioritizes resources that are owned locally and/or advised by stakeholder community members.

There's going to be a big transition of wealth over the next 15 to 20 years as boomers age out of business ownership. And in a lot of rural communities, sons and daughters are not interested in taking over these companies that are anchors in the community. If there was a model to transition that could create more cooperatives, it would give a new destiny and opportunity to the community as a whole.

3

Work regionally to build trust, achieve scale, and meet shared outdoor recreation challenges and opportunities.

Regional action allows localities to address shared challenges and opportunities together and achieve outdoor recreation outcomes at a productive scale.

Don't pit small communities against each other. Instead, encourage them to come in together on a grant. Funders shouldn't make it too prescriptive. Every landscape is different. To make it work, a program or grant has to be specific to a rural place, considering its culture, needs, and assets.

PA Wilds Center*

5

Design for equitable access to and participation in outdoor recreation activities.

Practitioners expressed fear around engaging with federal funding, given the high stakes involved with potentially making a mistake in project administration or reporting.

We need to invest in capacity in the community itself. Thinking about health, kids that get outdoors are much more resilient in the future when they're struggling at home. And so, how do we start doing that in our community? Even these rural youth are not getting outdoors.

Qualities of Hubs

- Collaborate as an essential way of being and doing.
- Are of their region, know their region, and build trust in their region.
- Bridge issues and silos.
- Take and tolerate risk.
- Analyze at the systems level and intentionally address gaps in the systems.

The Foundational Element requires identifying and dismantling historical and ongoing discriminatory practices that disadvantage rural people and places based on place, race, & class.

Strategies for Rural

- New narrative for rural
 - lead with opportunities, focus on local capacity (abundance vs deficit/scarcity)
 - Interconnectedness and interdependence
 - No siloed conversations
 - everything is in the regional and system
 - Non-traditional partners / think regionally (dimensions)

Strategies for Rural

- Being inclusive is more than an invitation – build trust and listen
- Understand all of your regional assets / capitals
- What it's like to be/have a Rural Development Hubs
- Gentrification vs improvement & retention
- Momentum builds community engagement
